FREEPORT HIGH SCHOOL

FREEPORT, NEW YORK

FOREWORD

Each of us is a voyager, a pilgrim searching for truth in the wilderness of time and experience. Each of us reaches for a different truth, but we share a desire to find some satisfaction, some justification for existence. Each experience, either solitary or social alters the goal we seek and the direction of our movement toward it. The ceaseless transition of life itself, the physical changes of growing, and the emotional changes of growing up, compel changes of other sorts. We are compelled individually, to try to solve the problems of living together and, collectively, to try to unravel the secrets of the Universe. We always try to expand our knowledge and influence. During the high school years, our strides towards maturity and the truth we reek are rapid. In high school, perhaps for the first time, we shoulder a large burden of responsibility. We become involved in many worthwhile projects, receiving personal satisfaction and enrichment as rewards. We begin to relate the heroes of literature to our own lives and to profit from their experiences. We mature greatly, as the period of preparation for our entrance into society draws to a close. Our high school years have been restless ones. Each of us has come a long way, to the very threshold of maturity. Recognizing the importance of transition and motion of the high school years, we have adopted the portrayal of this motion as the guiding purpose of this yearbook. We hope it induces a feeling of motion as well as a memory of the notable events of our high school career.

DEDICATION

The duties of a high school principal encompass many varied and demanding tasks. The principal must, of course, supervise the formation and execution of the multiple policies and regulations of his school, in itself a formidable responsibility. He must also administer discipline, assume responsibility for the numerous student activities, act as a mediator in student conflicts, and, either personally or with his staff, handle a ceaseless flow of paperwork. In addition, the principal should develop a personal relationship with his students. There should be a familiarity between student and principal, a mutual respect and affection born of common interests. A principal should endeavor to acquaint himself with as many of his students as possible. Mr. John Wesley Southard has been the principal of Freeport High School for thirteen years. During this period many important changes have been instituted. Some fine examples, occurring during our years in the high school are the beginning of the honor and accelerated classes, programmed math, and expanded business program and the modern fully equipped language laboratories. Naturally the administrative burden has been borne and the standard of education maintained. Mr. Southard has always shown his students boundless enthusiasm and interest in them and their activities. He has proven himself to be a warm, friendly, highly dedicated man. There has never been the slightest wavering in his interest and concern for his students. He has always been involved in student activities, not only as an administrator interested in statistics but also as a man interested in people. He has earned the respect, affection and gratitude of the student body. For all that he has offered us, especially his unflagging personal interest in our problems and activities, the Class of 1963 dedicates this yearbook to Mr. John Wesley Southard.

DR. JOHN HENRY MARTIN
SUPERINTENDENT OF SCHOOLS

Dr. John Henry Martin's arrival in Freeport as Superintendent of Schools in 1961 coincided with increasing local, state, and national concern for the educational challenge of the space age, the continuing threat to the American way of life posed by world Communism, and a realization that the annual cost of American education was 20 billion dollars, and increasing at the rate of 1½ billion dollars a year.

Since July, 1961, under Dr. Martin's leadership, curriculum changes have included expansion of the high school programs in history, mathematics, science, industrial arts and guidance. Programmed team-teaching in Math and Advanced Placement Courses in Math and Science are two new features of the High School curriculum.

An excellent opportunity for students to work at their own pace is provided by Programmed Math. Under this new system, each student acquires a new independence in covering the subject matter. The programming equips them for the self-reliance necessary in later life.

Designed to provide the superior student with college credits in the fields of Math and Science, the Advanced Placement Courses will consist of college freshman chemistry and calculus. For the past two years the Science Department has been formulating plans to enlarge and modernize the labs to accomodate this new program.

In the junior high, the block program has given students more time for individualized instruction and personal guidance. The Seventh Grade Center will open in 1964 creating a new dimension in Jr. High School education.

The center is meant to act as a transitional element between grade school and junior high school levels. There, students will be able to adapt to secondary school programming and activities at a slower pace than they would by suddenly entering high school.

In Freeport's elementary schools, increasing attention is being given to individualized rather than group instruction in reading. In-service workshops gave teachers the opportunity to learn newer techniques and concepts in modern math and reading instruction.

Personnel changes have included the promotion of Mr. Franklin to the Dodd Jr. High Principalship, the elevation of Mr. Ashley to Assistant Principal of the High School, and the appointment of the two Assistant Superintendents, Mr. Gerard and Mr. Williamson.

CLIFTON B. SMITH

Decisions of the Board of Education influence every Freeport student. Dedicated to the best interests of all the students, these men believe that there is no greater or more productive investment than the investment in the schooling of future citizens. Members of our School Board give heavily of their time and energy. Their work is often taken for granted by the student body and the public for it is mostly concerned with general policy formulation. The Board is responsible for the planning of school construction, school maintenance, and the annual budget presentation which now exceeds five million dollars a year for the operation of Freeport's public school system.

Freeport's School Board believes in active communication with the taxpayers whom they represent. Thus there are mostly meetings at which the public may see the trustee at work, periodic school newsletters, and the week to week publicity about our school appearance in the local press.

Currently the Board is presided over by Mr. Clifton B. Smith, who has been a Board member for over twenty years. Vice-president is Mr. Herbert F. Baehr. Remaining trustees include Mr. Hugh Erwin, Mr. Paul W. Garbo, and Mr. Howard B. Rasmussen.

Hundreds of students were milling about the hallways. To the casual observer it might appear that there was a riot in the making. The sign above their heads, however, read "Guidance Office" and they were waiting for a chance to see their counselor.

As soon as the first day of school is out, many students run down their guidance counselors to complain. Little do they realize all of the work, sweat, and toil which has gone into the making of their schedules.

The work of the Guidance Counselor begins shortly after the beginning of school and continues on through the end of the summer. During Sept., Oct. and Nov. they are busy giving college interviews and trying to with varying degrees of success get their senior class into the colleges of their choice. When this job is finally completed they must begin working with the Junior Class. During this time also, next year's scheduling must also be started and students who come with their problems must be helped. During the summer months while the students and teachers are swimming and sunning themselves on the nation's beaches, the guidance office is hard at work finishing the long task of making the schedules of over 1500 students and 80 teachers correspond. For this long and arduous task, their only reward is the students coming down to the door marked "Guidance" to complain.

GRADUATES

Humble voyagers are we o'er life's uncharted sea.

LIFE MAKES EACH OF US A VOYAGEUR

The thought that life makes each of us a voyageur brings to mind ways in which education, a must in the decade of the sixties, plays a part in determining a more exciting, meaningful trip.

Education can help to make the trip pleasant by encouraging in each of us an awareness of other voyageurs who are kind, thoughtful, and responsible people.

It can help to take the strangeness out of the trip and make it more certain by providing the factual information that leads us to discover truth for its own sake.

It can help to eliminate the loneliness by assisting us in developing our special talents so that we may use leisure time profitably.

It can help make the voyage more productive by enabling us to pursue studies which are suited to our abilities and to learn the techniques that are needed in today's job market.

It can help to make us excellent voyageurs, good voyageurs, or fair voyageurs. The opportunity is provided by education. The voyageur himself must in large part determine the quality of the voyage.

To you, the class of 1963, may your voyage always be successful.

Sincerely,

J. Wesley Southard

LITERARY

The sea is at its best when you are within the arms of a capacious chair selecting phases of the voyages you will never make.

Some Other Time

Tim Evans

Afternoon's crimson lay on the horizon, like some ghastly wound unbound,
and evening's breezes chided me as we walked. And I, speaking of Autumn, told you of restless nights and soaring hopes.
Night snickered among dark shadows as I hesitated by your side. You left and he poured scorn over me as dusk became darkness.

And as I watched the deepening creases of night's face beneath trees and telephone poles, he said to me; "Another time to you, another hope."
And he blended a salad of stars in a dish of shadows,
and offered to make amends.

Responsibility

Warren Handel

Responsibility is a cloak worn with varying degrees of sartorial success by different people. Some, to whom responsibility is an endless chain of drudgeries, always feel compelled to do things, never allowing pleasure or pride to enter their activities. Worn by other people, responsibility is a shapeless, tasteless garment where color and texture are hardly suited to their complexions. Others, to whom responsibility is hardly drudgical, feel privileged to face the challenge of each new task. On these people, the cloak of responsibility sits as if it had long awaited the pleasure of clothing them. It always enhances their appearance, being perfectly suited to their bearing and complexion. It is small wonder that the former always avoids this unflattering garment for a more humble, less fashionable one; while the latter group seeks this proud, stylish garment at every opportunity.

The Stranger

Nancy Eisenstadt

My fence is up
And if you would
Please climb atop
The newly weather-vaned
Roof over there
And if your eye
Should fall on
An ever so slender
Daised patch of Morning meadow then
Would you kindly
Note the "No Trespassers"
Sign beside the tree?

Well sir
I'd say "You come in
And have a cup of cider"
But I see you want to
Be on your way and
About your business
So —"What did you say
Your business was?"
Don't stop to count the Fenceposts or to catch
The shade of a tree or
To shuffle your feet in
The dust or something.

Just follow the leaves
That float in the stream
And take mind to look Back when you reach the Wagon road 'cause I'll
Be watching you from
My weather-vaned roof
Up there and I'm a Real crack shot and
Then again sometimes
When it's a little too
Windy I get impatient
Sitting up there.

A Voice in the Darkness

Sue Waddell

I stood and watched and waited till
A cry above the darkness rose
A cry that broke the empty still.
That cry woke hope within my heart —
The end of blackest entity —
That cry that signified my start.
The start of life, of love, of all.
A world to fill the universe
Was the message of the call
I strained toward the echoed cry
Trembling within my soul
Hoping, and fearing to deny
But yet I heard it come again —
A stronger cry now like a shout —
I wondered what it would portend;
A world completely free from fears
Or one all filled with woe and tears
A world with hopes and joys and life
But alas having death and strife.
Births and loves, peace and war,
Hate and fear; building up and tearing down
Gentleness and cruelty; freedom and imprisonment
Paradise and damnation; life and death.
The voice that cries in the darkness
Is the birth of beings to be all
Or to perish having nothing.

Feet Cold Walking

Barry Feldman

Snow's white but black
From rooftops dripping
Not settling soft but dripping
Tinny.

Blue green woods green blue heavy Mirrored branches upon unbroken ponds but Sidewalk slush and feet
Cold walking.

Bird and chicks under wing warm with Nest of weeds and sticks used whole but
Sidewalk slush and collar up and feet
Cold walking.

Feet cold walking
Feet coldwalking
Collar up and feet
Cold walking.

Bird just sitting wing with warm but
Feet cold walking
Slush and wet with
Feet cold walking.

Life, looking through a glass darkly, cannot see all that it is or can be and does not know.

To be
A fool is the Vocation of many
As such it is not to be too much scorned.

Never Mind how I go
For I go at the will
Of winds which are beyond control
Not mine.

ON FORTUNE'S WINGS

Timothy Evans

He had moved there about three years ago, just about the time when they filled the marshes in the area and built split levels all around his house. It was an eyesore then, with its loose shingles and broken windows, and rotten steps leading up to the unpainted door which opened into the first of nine badly plastered rooms set over a perpetually flooded cellar with a dirt floor and boarded windows. He set about fixing the house up right away. His wife was five months pregnant and his son almost immediately broke his arm on the steps leading into the cellar, so he went at it alone, plastering, painting, cementing. He had two of the rooms demolished and the cellar finished into a den and he haggled with the builders about getting his house hooked up to the new sewer system that was coming with the split levels. By the time he had lived there one year and the first of his new neighbors were moving in he had finished the inside of the house and begun the fight with the swampweeds and high tides in what was to be his front lawn.

He was an insurance agent. It was a good job, requiring a lot of hard work and paying not exceptionally well, but there was room for advancement and the commissions were excellent if you worked at it — and he did — so, for him at least, it was a good job. He was on good terms with his neighbors and his son had more than a few close friends and his wife was happy, so he was content living there and working at his job and enjoying what the Sunday papers called living in modern suburbia.

Then he was notified that his company was opening a new branch out on the coast; would he like to move out there and become regional director? They made plans to sell the house.

"Corey, I feel like I'll go to pieces if this goes on. First the post cards and phone calls, then that hideous cross, and now this — let's move out right away. We've sold the house; we can take an apartment somewhere for a while until we're ready to go." The boy lay on the couch with his head to the wall, his arm crossed limply across his chest. "The doctor will be here soon, Jane. Don't worry — it's probably just a sprain." He moved over to the couch and squatted beside his son. "Chris, are you ready to tell us what happened now? Are you going to tell us now? Are you?" The boy groaned and turned away. Corey sighed and walked into the kitchen.

When his wife let the doctor in, Corey was drinking a martini and thinking about the phone calls and the post cards and the cross and about how he had been living there for three years without really knowing what his neighbors were like, what sort of people his son was associating with. He sighed and walked out into the living room and stood near the window watching the breezes blowing loose autumn leaves about. He lit a cigarette and retreated again to the kitchen. He was just finishing his second drink and listening as the doctor told Jane it was broken, that Chris would have to go to the hospital to have it set, when the telephone rang. He picked up the receiver and turned pale as he heard a muffled voice. The voice ceased and Corey leaned against the wall, not hearing the dial tone's insistent message that the caller had hung up. He did not hear it until he began his reply — a weak, sickly warning that he would have the police down to investigate if this continued, that he had a right to sell his house to whomever he pleased — then he hung up, just beginning to hear his wife's concerned voice asking what was the matter.

The apartment was in town, much nearer — within walking distance — to his office and the business district. His real estate agent, Gilman, was nearby too, and he sometimes met Corey around town. Gilman would tell him how the sale was coming on, ask him for details — about different parts of the house: How is the plumbing? All right, almost brand new. The wiring? All new too, except for the upstairs rooms, but they weren't used much. The papers were drawn up and would soon be ready to sign. So they lived from day to day and in a few weeks they'd be on a plane for California, the fare and money for a new house and a little to spare thanks to the improvements on the house and three years of careful budgeting.

Tuesdays Corey was off, and this Tuesday he had nothing much to do so he sat in the apartment reading and thinking about the final papers which were to be signed tomorrow. When the telephone rang he felt a chill of apprehension, recalling the calls of several weeks ago, but he picked up the receiver, smiling to himself; the papers were all but signed and no one from the neighborhood knew where he was staying. Corey listened and grunted and hung up. He left the apartment unhurriedly — almost leisurely.

"Rumor has it someone slipped a couple of pennies in the fuse box," he said, emotionless and staid, watching the last of the flames die their slow deaths in the black rubble that used to be a house and before that was even a home and which now lay stark and dead, something to draw relieved sighs from passersby. Corey wasn't listening because he knew all about it — or all he needed to know — because sleepless nights had warned him that something would happen; so he walked away from Gilman and up to the front steps and looked down into the gaping cavern which was the floodproof cellar. The last of the firemen who had been fighting the blaze jumped up into the last of the firetrucks and it roared off with a slight clanging from the bell. And Corey was alone by the cavern except for Gilman who stood on the sidewalk uneasily, wanting to comfort him but not knowing what to do, what to say. Finally he did say something and, receiving no reply, got into his car and drove off.

Two children stand at a window in a house across the street from what was Corey's house; He's just standing there, why doesn't he do something, why doesn't he go away. Can't we just watch him, we're not doing anything. Overhead the gulls fly and the winds spread fleecy clouds over the sky like frosting on a cake and still he stands there, not moving, not thinking.

Metamorphosis

by Catherine DeVita

I chant of a caterpillar
Begotten by nature herself.
During damp and rainy weather
It slides smoothly over dew-laden
Leaves. In the hot of summer,
Over the dry green grass it crawls,
With its head perched upward to Find its way through the emerald
Maze. When bleak winter comes with its Boisterous gusts of wind, this helpless
Creature nestles in its silk-woven
Cocoon. Though nearly harmless,
This small being of nature's realm
Delights no one but the curious
Boy. All others shrink from it or Take no interest at all. Alas, Luckless caterpillar! But when
Its stage as a caterpillar has slipped by, it is ready
To start a new life. No longer
A mossy green creature abhorred
By all, but now a delicate being.
Behold the beautiful butterfly!

Louisa May Alcott

by Anita Saltz

My family was considered to be of the "genteel poor,"
And I hated the humiliation and shame this brought us.
My main ambition in life was to earn enough money
To make us comfortable, for my father had no concept
Of the value of a dollar.
I became the "breadwinner" by writing stories.
Everyone thought my stories were good.
But I didn't.
"Potboilers" I called them.
I was sorry I didn't have time
To write any really good stories.
I longed to write a novel
For adults, instead of children,
But I didn't have the time.
When Marmee died I was so sad
I couldn't write for almost a year.
When May died she left me her baby Lulu!
A small compensation for a sisters death,
However, I had longed for a child of my own.
From the time of Marmee's death,
I was a victim of all sorts of aches and pains.
By the time I was 55 I was very tired.
I had lived a full life.
It felt good just to go to sleep,
Without any more aches and pains. — Forever —

A Thought for the Future

by David Lerner

"The time has come," the walrus said. "To talk of many things." A quote applicable to the situation at hand. That situation being the completion of a high school career. And here, with the gates of the future at our fingertips, we should stop. We should wonder. We should fear what lies in store. Lewis Carroll's walrus was a serious minded fellow quite concerned with the more important conditions. While we're not interested in shoes, and ships, and sealing wax, as was the walrus, we are concerned with ability, position, and happiness.

We have culminated twelve years of required schooling and have reached the verge of the unstable future, which will give to us only an amount proportional to what has been given to us in the past.

The past is a wonderful thing regardless of how seemingly unsuccessful it was, and it's a shame that it is gone. The future, on the other hand, is vast and unsure, and we fearfully look upon it. We've reached the end of the past's clutches. At this point we realize, moreso than ever before, that we can not turn back. The wonderful, warm, happy past has turned us out onto that small platform between it's barred gates and the open gates of the future.

Yes, the gates of the cold future are open, but a prevailing fog limits our view. The greatest obstacle before us is incorporating our past knowledge and experiences, thus enabling ourselves to prepare for the future under the depressing influence of the fog.

If we have successfully done so, the fog will lift of its own accord, and the future will present us with many an opportunity to engage ourselves in that which our ability can make the best of. A past will be ours to look upon and be proud of with the oncome of each day, each week, and each year. Should we fail, however, the fog will hover about us forever, and the only past we can cherish is the one which so recently rejected us. (The early impression is that we reject the past.)

The presence of the fog is more individual than collective. Therefore it can be coped with in many ways, depending on the individual. The fog is infallible when cracked the wrong way, and attempting to do so by developing a false shield against it can lead only to misery and unhappiness. Regardless of its density, look into it. For its absolute presence, respect it; and despite your inability, conquer it.

The Bible says, "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you." Open this thought up a little more, and in it you might see a way to conquer the fog, and make of your life what great men have made of theirs.

If a student passes by the auditorium early Wednesday mornings he will hear the voices of a group of hardworking students, the Student Council. Newly formed this year, this group under the able direction of Mr. Mitchell has shown its capability of making worthwhile contributions to our life. The purpose of this organization is to be truly representative of the students and to promote harmonious relations between the students and faculty.

NATIONAL HONOR SOCIETY

Founded in 1929, the Freeport Chapter of the National Honor Society was one of the first to be established on Long Island. Today, as in past years, being elected to membership in the National Honor Society is one of the highest honors which a high school can bestow upon a student.

The Flaming Torch, symbol of the organization bears the letters which stand for its four cardinal principles; Character, Scholarship, Leadership, and Service. To gain this highest of honors, a student must be of high moral character, stand scholastically in the top fifteen percent of his class, demonstrate his leadership ability through active participation in the various school activities and prove of service to the school and his fellow students by contributing his time, skill, and knowledge for their benefit.

This year, the Freeport Chapter of the National Honor Society is under the able leadership of Mrs. Fredericka Albert. As in other years, two inductions were held: one in December for members of the Senior class and one in June for both Juniors and Seniors.

With the induction of Barbara Edwards this year membership in our National Honor Society reached the one thousand mark.

KEY CLUB

The F.H.S. Key Club, Freeport's most distinguished service club, is part of an international organization sponsored by Kiwanis. Completely non-profit, it is dedicated to service of the school and the community. With the help and guidance of Mr. Joseph Devlin, the Key Club sold programs at all the home football and basketball games, made and sold Christmas wreaths, did painting and plastering work at the Freeport Historical Society Museum, ushered at assemblies and various school functions, and sold candy at basketball games. The members also helped to raise money for the Student Ambassador Fund, participated in Freeport's Seventieth Anniversary Parade by volunteering to pull the floats, worked to keep the cafeteria clean by patrolling during lunch periods and installing several colorful posters, promoted dress-up-day every Friday, and ran a dance for the enjoyment of the other Long Island Key Clubs as well as for FHS students. The motto of Key Club International is "We build through service." The Freeport chapter of the Key Club endeavored to build character, initiative, and leadership among the student body while serving all of Freeport.

NEWS SERVICE STAFF

The News Service Staff keeps Freeporters aware of school activities. Under the able direction of Mrs. Charlotte Tessier, the club submits articles to local newspapers concerning school activities, elections and honors awarded to the students.

The club also keeps a scrapbook of their articles.

FORENSIC SOCIETY

In a time of upheaval and sudden change, a concerned citizenry acquires a more vital importance than in periods of relative peace. Among the practices which insure an informed public is a maintained dialogue involving the exchange of ideas on vital world issues. One method of maintaining such an exchange is the practice of organized debate, and this method has proved exceptionally successful in Freeport High School. Organized last year by Mr. James Mitchell and a group of interested students, the Forensic Society has served as a forum for student expression through intra-group competitions. Debates with other schools are currently in the planning stage and a panel discussion to be broadcast over the radio has been arranged. The Forensic Society has come into its own as one of the most stimulating organizations in Freeport High School.

The Masque and Wigers of Freeport High School will never forget this eventful year. To them, it has been a period of sheer excitement and glamour filled with a stirring opening night and the intrigue of backstage life. The enlightening experience offered by this unique club has provided a basic knowledge of the world of acting and grease paint for those who wish to enter into dramatics in later life. By taking a dash of talent and a cupful of enthusiasm and willingness to work, the faculty advisor, Mr. Henry Burnett and an untiring group of student directors created a pleasing production of Thornton Wilder's hilarious comedy, "The Matchmaker". Everyone will always remember the planning and success of the scenery design and construction (including the exhilarating paint fights), the makeup crew in their colorful shirts, the lighting boys and the blown fuses, the stage hands, the publicity people, the costume designers, and the entire bevy of aspiring young actresses and actors.

From the type of the first tryouts till the curtain went down on the last performance, "The Matchmaker" was a truly wonderful and inspiring experience to all who participated in any of the complexity of jobs connected with it. After an amazing "clean-up" day when the prospective Masque and Wigers swept up and literally swung from the chandeliers, the hard workers were finally rewarded with membership in Freeport's great institution — the Masque and Wig.

The thrill and honor of belonging to this activity will be shared by many more future students of Freeport High. They, too, will have their problems and successes along with the deep and satisfying feeling of a job well done.

THE MAKING OF A PLAY

Peter began his directing duties with the designing of the set.

After the set had been designed, the construction crew began work.

Then the flats had to be painted.

Adjusting the house lights can be dangerous work.

The nerve-wracking rehearsals began.

The costumes arrived just in time for the dress rehearsal.

The make-up artists helped to age the actors to suit their parts.

Those important scenes had to be rehearsed.

"Cast, this is the last run through."

A few last minute adjustments.

It's busy backstage on opening night.

The nervous actors dressed for their entrances.

This is the moment, "House lights down."

CHESS CLUB

In the 1962-63 school year, the Freeport High School Chess Club greatly increased and expanded its activities. The main purpose of this worthwhile club is to develop the skills of planning and strategy so necessary in the game of life. This year they also participated in the Long Island Chess League Intramural Competitions. Their new advisor, Mr. Brasch, a teacher of mathematics in Freeport High School, is an expert chess player and has given them excellent and inspiring guidance throughout the year.

Lauren's gracious family, the Wanjeks, eagerly await her arrival.

Of course, Lauren had to try her hand at skiing, but for a while was unsuccessful.

Lauren and her adopted sister, Lisi, soon became fast friends.

"This year marks the thirtieth anniversary of the founding of the Experiment in International Living, started in 1932 by Donald Watt. He believed that people the world over, more alike than different, can learn to understand and respect one another through a more direct and intimate association.

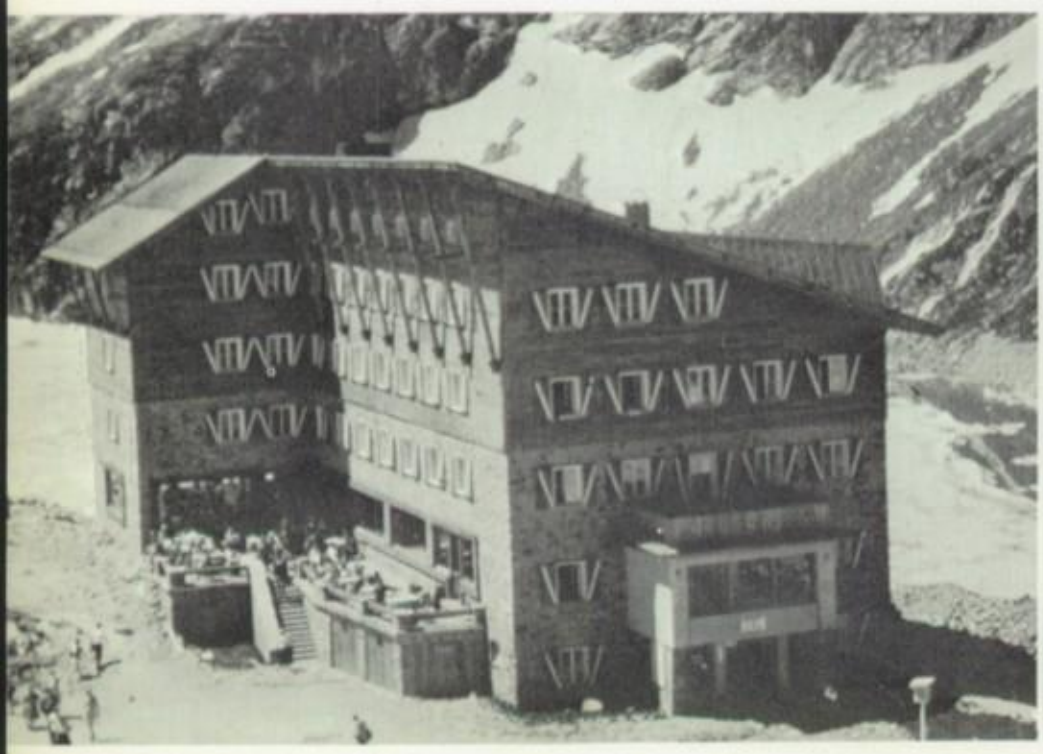
This past summer I was fortunate enough to be chosen as Freeport's Community Ambassador to Austria. My family, the Wanjeks, lived in a fairly large town near the Hungarian border where our group of ten Experimenters stayed for one month.

Toward the end of July, the informal trip started. The Americans with their Austrian counterparts, toured throughout Austria, and into parts of Italy and Switzerland.

This summer was the most valuable and rewarding experiment one could ever wish to have."

Lauren Page Young

Freeport turns out to welcome Lauren home.



Lauren spent many enjoyable hours in this quaint ski lodge.

The first meeting was a pleasant surprise for both Lauren and her adopted parents.

In the three years that a high school student spends in FHS, he is treated to the instruction of one of the best group of teachers not only on Long Island, but in the whole United States. Although many of us complain bitterly when our marks are not up to the standards we have set for ourselves, in the final analysis, the fault lies with the student and not the teacher.

The ability of our teachers is shown in the above average number of scholarships won each year by the graduating class and the wide range of colleges which they have a chance to attend. It is shown also in the high averages which many of these students have maintained.

For these and many other reasons we dedicate this page of the 1963 Voyageur to the Faculty of Freeport High School.

The Class Song

We're the Senior Class,
Yes, the Senior Class
We're the class of '63.

We've been here three years
Yelling out football cheers,
And now it's time for us to graduate.

You will see some day
That we all will say
Freeport High School, You're the best!

Yankee Doodle would have said
If he had been a senior
It's great to be in the class of '63.

During all our days
We will think always
of the fun we had in school,
Sr. plays and bands
Proms and holding hands
We even had some time to go to class.

Now it's time to part,
And within each heart,
We shall always miss old Freeport High.
Yankee Doodle's out tonight
So we will have to tell you
We're glad you came to Tel'Star '63

ART SEMINAR

The Art Seminar, a group composed of admirers and producers of the arts, is one of the newest and most far-reaching organizations in Freeport High School. This discussion group headed and founded by Mr. Cumins of the Art Department, is dedicated to the investigation of all forms of art.

This year the organization sponsored a ballet and modern dance exhibition in the lobby of the high school. Over one hundred interested students attended this informal performance presented by representatives of the Peter Pan Dance Studio.

The organization has also made numerous trips to to the art galleries of the New York City area to observe art exhibitions. The Kandinsky Display at the Guggenheim Museum and the presentation of the famed Mona Lisa at the Metropolitan Museum of Art are only two exhibitions that the group attended.

Many of the members of the seminar also attended to television filming of a Sid Caesar program.

Although field trips are an important part of the activities of the Art Seminar, most of the organizations time is spent in beneficial informal discussions.

In the lobby, dancers from the Peter Pan Dance Studio execute ballet positions before the student body.

Coach Bill Ashley and his Red Devil football team once again enjoyed a fine season. Despite a mediocre 4—4 record, the Devils romped over traditional rival Baldwin in the last game of the year by the score of 34—12.

As usual, Coach Ashley had a really well-balanced team. Bob (Beany) Brophy, Tom Bird, and star center Guy Riccardi, formed the nucleus of the offensive team. Jack Yeno once again did a great job on defense.

All in all, the class of '63 was very proud of its footballers during the past season.

J.V. FOOTBALL

J.V. football, as we all know, is the training ground for future varsity stars. Thus, it is the task of Coach Devlin and his assistant Coach Nickla to make sure that the players develop to the maximum.

This year's team included such players as Louis Rice, Bob Rush, and Joshua Epstein. These fellows and their teammates played their games most Monday afternoons right behind the high school.

In the years to come, J.V. football should become more important.

Here some J.V. teamsmen practice before an important game.

HOCKEY

The girls' hockey team, under the expert direction of Miss Gottlieb, enjoyed an active season last fall. In Interclass games, the seniors triumphed over the juniors in preparation for Honor Team Playday.

Freeport's team displayed excellent sportsmanship and fine play in this competition.

RIFLERY

F.HS.'s rifle team, always a power in its league, proved to be just that this season. Captain Ernie Krieger and coach Pike led the team to a strong fourth place finish. Dennis Posa and Robert Sparling are two of the other "stars" of the team.

TENNIS

Under the guidance of coach Russell Terry, the F.H.S. tennis team enjoyed one of its finest seasons this year. Despite early losses to Baldwin and Uniondale, the team placed fourth with a 6—8 record. Mike Laskey, Dave and Jody Fleischer, Bob Rubin, Jeff Goldstein, Paul Merringoff, Bill Leinhardt and manager Burt Glass rounded out the team. Coach Terry feels that next season will be even better.

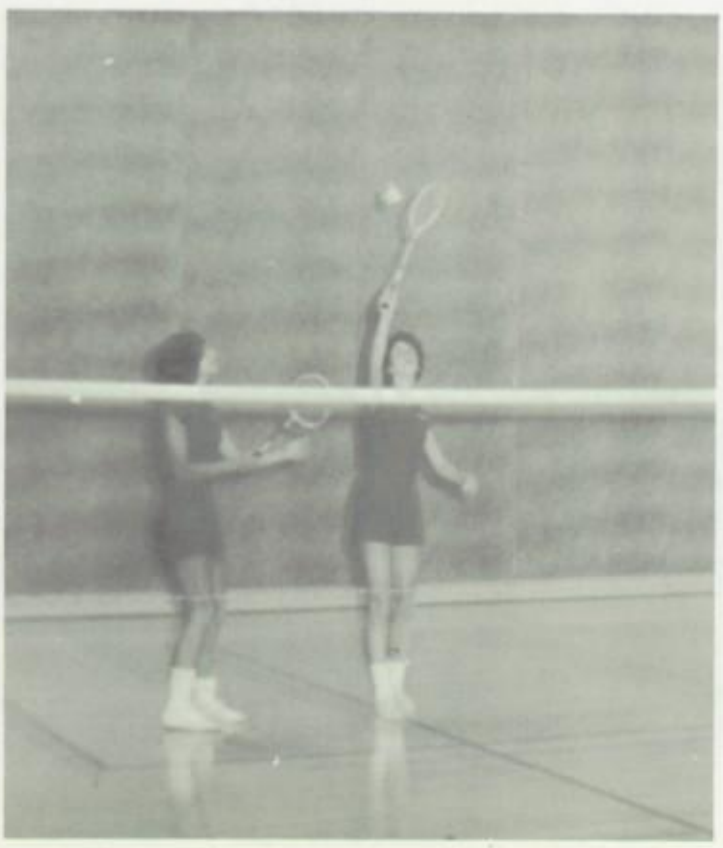
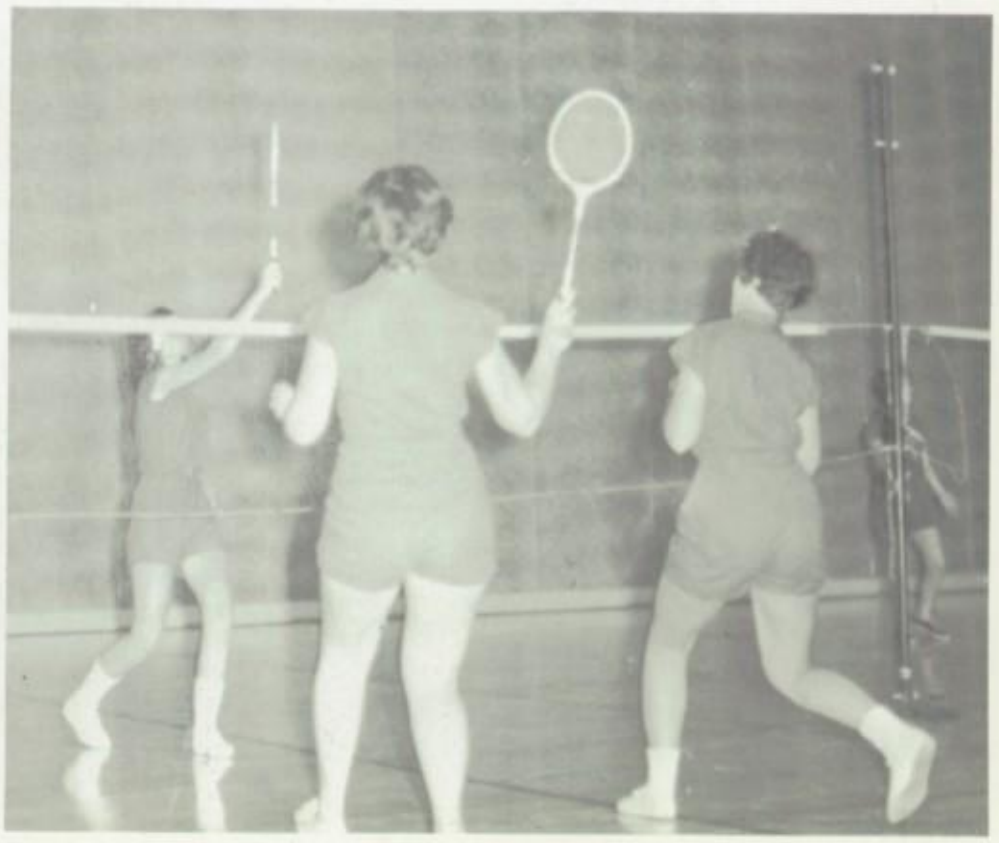
BADMINTON

Twice a week last fall the girls' badminton team met with Miss Shuler to improve their games and to learn the latest playing techniques.

The girls enjoyed themselves from their first game to their fine showing at Honor Team Playday.





CROSS COUNTRY

"That's it!" said Mr. Bessel as the harriers chugged past for the last lap. Afternoon was becoming night. Practice was over until tomorrow afternoon. This had been the procedure for the entire season, and the team's records showed it — ten wins and one loss for the season. A similarly successful season is assured next year, based on the running abilities of the sophomores and juniors who have added substantially to the team's strength this year.

VOLLEYBALL

One of the many unsung activities for girls is volleyball. Under the able direction of their advisor, Miss Schuler, the girls practiced three afternoons a week. This schedule is greatly expanded from the former two a week schedule. Any girl was eligible to try out for the team. In addition to following their rigid three day a week practice schedule, the girls played many games against many volleyball teams from such schools as Oceanside High School, Hempstead High School and Uniondale High School. During the past winter, the girls took part in an honor team play-day which was held at Hempstead High School. At this play-day, the girls of Freeport High School distinguished themselves in this field of sportsmanship and fair play.

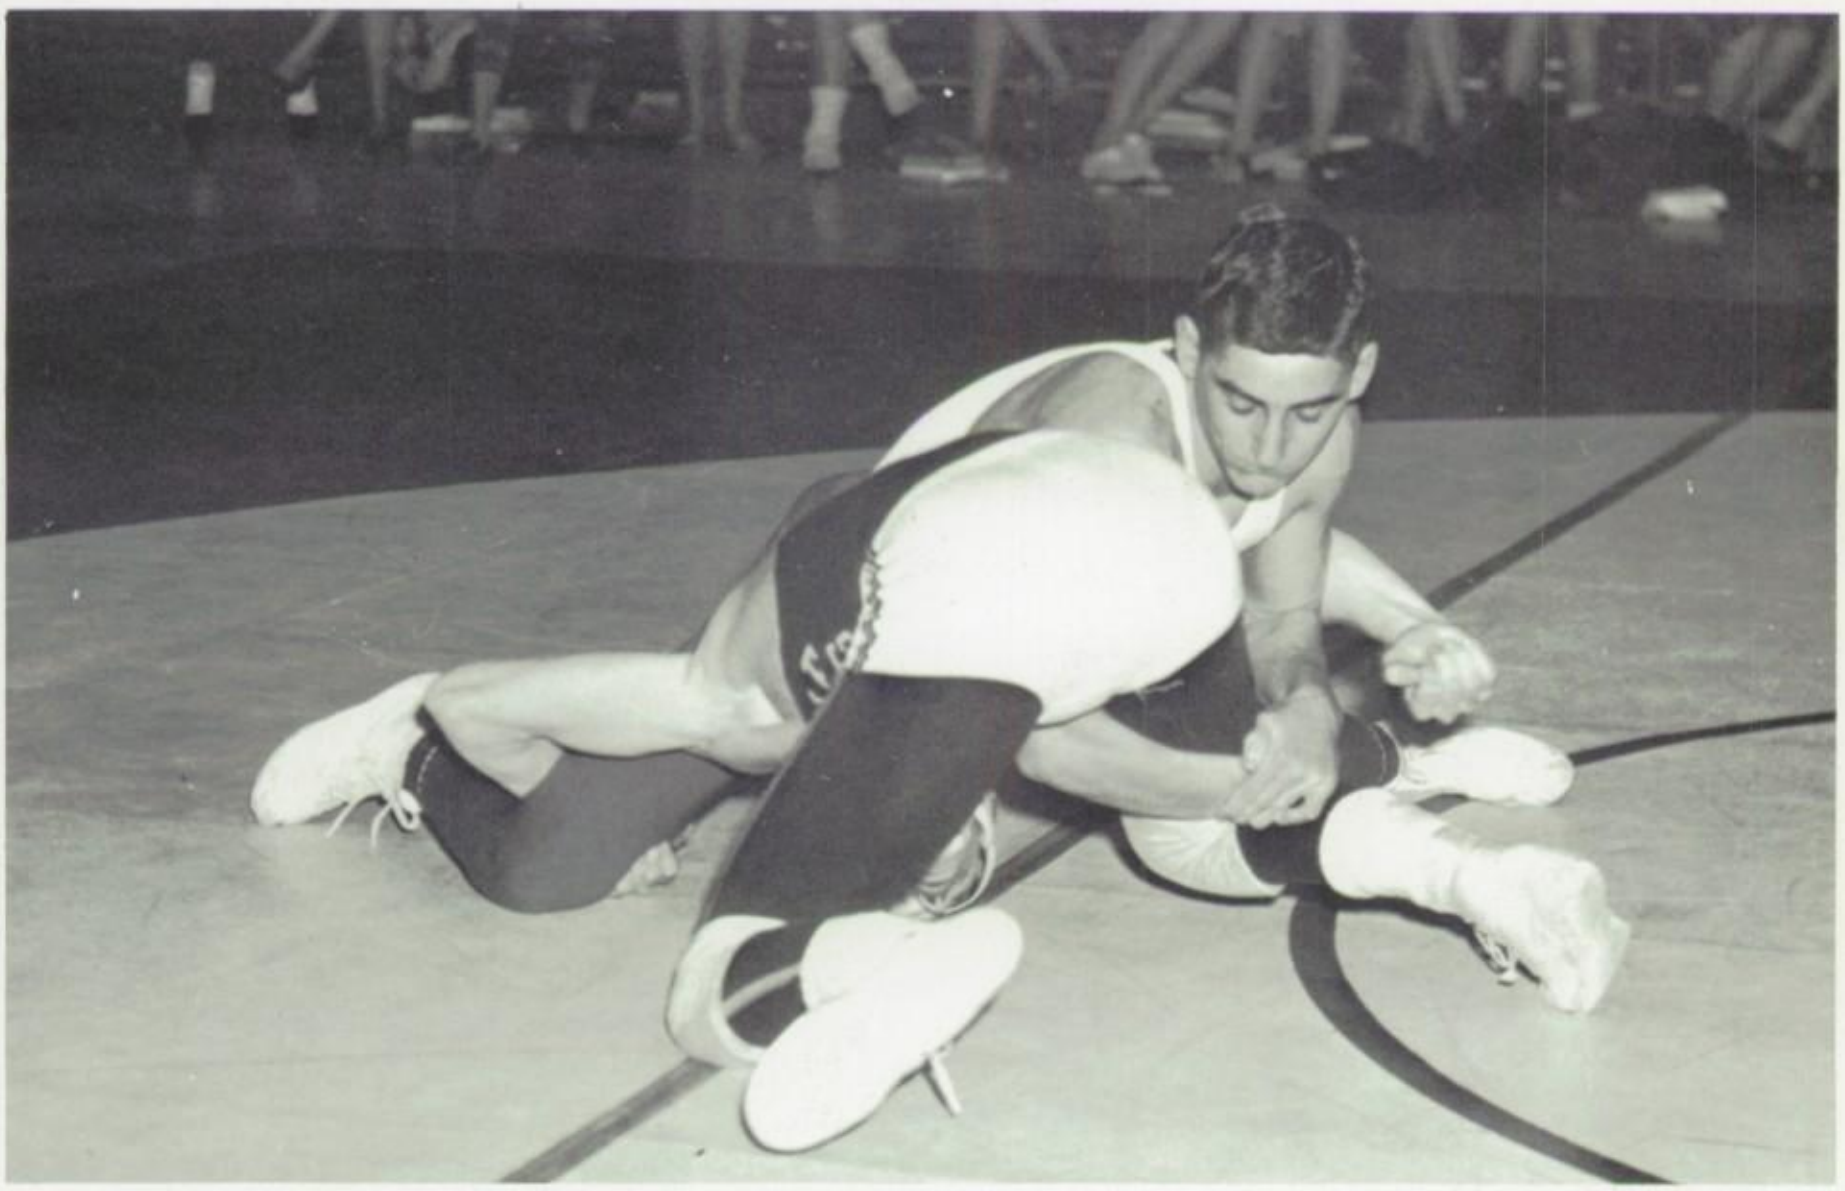
WRESTLING '63



A precision sport demanding of its participants great drive and capacity for work, wrestling has become one of the leading winter spectator sports in FHS. This year's distinguished team produced Andy Taylor's state championship. Also outstanding in their respective weight classes were Gary Pros, Bob Grossman, Barry Feldman, Bill Andrews and Bill Vivian. The wrestling team provided many exciting moments and much tense action for the many who turned out at the matches.

SOFTBALL

The Softball Honor Team showed great team spirit and put much effort into earning the skills and techniques of playing softball. By practicing twice a week in school, not including an infinite number of small games, the team improved not only their skill, but also their spirit. When our softball honor team attended the Playday in Baldwin, our team showed great school spirit and fine sportsmanship.

BOWLING

The bowling team, usually the forgotten team of the winter sports season, showed that it deserves much more recognition. Excellent bowling by Steve Goodhue, Chris Panagos, and Richard Brown made our keglers a team to be reckoned with.

year's team.

After three months of enjoyable practice, the best bowlers were chosen to comprise the Girls' Bowling Honor team. Miss Schuler, advisor to the team, obviously made a wise choice. Freeport's team placed first in the Honor Team Play Day held in Baldwin.

BASKETBALL

Miss Gottlieb.

Freeport's girl's basketball team, ably coached by Miss Gottlieb, managed quite successfully to master new game regulations in time to make an outstanding showing this season. The complex "roving player" rules, a recent innovation in girls' basketball, soon, became familiar to all the girls' on the team, who could be found practicing twice a week last winter for the inter-scholastic competition. The girls' developed good sportsmanship and teamwork as well as good basketball techniques. Freeport's team placed second in the Honor Team Playday held last winter in Hempstead. The team deserves praise for an excellent playing season.

Miss Edith A. Waters.

Though her span of service in Freeport High School was short, Miss Edith Waters provided an example of industry and responsibility as head of the Health Department. A member of the Freeport School System for fifteen years, Miss Waters brought with her a wealth of nursing experience to the health office, including service in the Nursing Corps as a lieutenant during World War II and as president of the Educational Nursing Organization.

It was not, however, her nursing ability alone which made her loss dearly felt. Her warmth and rare skill with human nature endeared to the student body and faculty.

In Memoriam

Very often it is the quiet dedication which a person displays over a period of years that distinguishes him from the ordinary. Such distinction need not be rewarded by public accolade, but may be remembered by the impact which the individual makes upon those who know him and appreciate his service. This is most certainly the case in regard to Mr. William Lockwood, Freeport High School's head custodian, who passed away early this year. Beset with none of the momentous responsibilities which are often the mark of high public officials, he received none of the ceremony which typifies their deaths. But his memorial is, in its way, more profound and moving than that of many a figure in the public eye; it is the unexpressed tribute of those who worked alongside him, the indelible admiration of his friends, and the simple contributions he made in his years at Freeport.

Mr. William Lockwood.
